

Greetings from Poland

As my first month back in Warsaw has come to a close, I am filled with thankfulness for all that God has done. His blessings are so abundant if only we take the time to recognize them. I'm thankful for safe travels, friends to pick me up at the airport, an amazing team, reconnections with old friends, for new friendships, for God's provision, for your support, and so much more. God is so good!

This month I shared Turkish breakfast for the first time with our friend from Turkey, walked with a friend through a challenging time in their life, attended a coffee festival with a friend I have not seen in a long time, and said "goodbye" to a friend as they returned to their home country indefinitely. It was a month full of both sad and joyful moments, but what do these seemingly unrelated things have in common? Each of these encounters was an opportunity to connect with a soul in a personal way, to reflect God's love to them by showing up for them no matter what their life looks like in the moment. We were able to have meaningful conversations and to be there for them through both the good and the bad. I am thankful for every connection, new and old, that God has placed in my life and I have full confidence that this is just the beginning of all God wants to do in their lives.

Moving Forward

I am holding in my hands an answer to many, many prayers. I received my Polish residency card shortly after I arrived back in Warsaw and I don't think I can express enough how thankful I am. It is a long, difficult process. It's taken over a year for this promise to be fulfilled, but God is so faithful! He has opened the door for me to stay and labor in this country I have fallen so in love with, and I'm so grateful for that opportunity. Thank you for your prayers along this journey!

I was able to visit my friend, Carol, for the first time since my return and I was finally able to meet her beautiful baby, Kaylah, who is now 9 months old. She cooked traditional food from her home country, Kenya, as we talked about life and caught up with each other. It is my hope to start a home bible study with her as she is searching for more. I'm praying that God would open the door for this opportunity in the near future.

Our team had the privilege of attending a conference at the church in Kraków. It was a blessing as we were ministered to and also had the opportunity to pray with the church members there. We always enjoy our time together and we are thankful for them!

Our supervising missionaries, Bro. and Sis. Patterson, joined us for a special service in a hotel conference room. We had several guests, many who are not pictured, and we had a great time in service and fellowshiping together. We are thankful for the leadership of the Pattersons and their investment in Poland and our team.

Thank you!!

Your prayers mean the world to us. We need your support, and we are so thankful that you are lifting our team and this nation up in prayer. You are a huge part of the work here and we could not do what we do without your support. Thank you!
