

Ministry

Being in ministry is being in the (people business) When we're in ministry, it's easy to get caught up in music practice, preparing for midweek Bible study, planning special events, and feeding dozens of people. In the midst of running around, making the tea and coffee for post-service fellowship, and keeping the babies from running in the sanctuary, God stops us in our tracks, and we notice the person still sitting in the pew, crying silent tears.

You put down the arms full of items you've collected, headed for lost and found, and take a seat. The moment you place a hand on their shoulder, it happens. The emotions that have been building for who knows how long come flowing out like a waterfall, and words burst out in sobs, barely coherent.

Here it is—the reason God called you to ministry. It's about the hurting and the broken, the people in need of prayer, a word of encouragement, or just a hug. Because ministry isn't about being busy for God—it's about being available to Him, so He can reach the people He loves, through you.

Mother's Day Celebration:

This past month, we hosted a special event to honor the mothers in our community. It was a beautiful time of fellowship and appreciation, as we recognized the vital role that mothers play both in the family and in the church. We shared a message of encouragement, offered small gifts, and created a warm atmosphere where everyone felt loved and valued.

Evangelism Efforts:

We've continued actively sharing the gospel with others, spreading the message of Jesus' love and salvation. Through one-on-one conversations, prayer walks, and intentional outreach, we've seen hearts open to the goodness of Jesus. Many have expressed a renewed curiosity about faith and a desire to learn more about the Word.

Community Fellowship Groups & Events:

We've been intentional in forming small groups and planning events that foster community and spiritual growth. These gatherings have provided safe spaces for people to connect, build relationships, and grow in faith together. From casual meetups, to organized events, we are seeing a growing sense of unity and support among the community.
