These past three months in Moldova have completely changed me – in ways I didn't even realize I needed. When I first came here, I just wanted to serve and make a difference. But there were moments when I honestly questioned if I was doing enough, if I was really making an impact in God's Kingdom. What I didn't realize at the time was that God was working – not just through me, but in me. He used every quiet moment, every conversation, and every challenge to draw me closer to Him.

In the stillness, God taught me how to really listen to His voice. There were days that felt slow or uncertain, but it was in those moments that He reminded me that ministry isn't always about doing something big or visible. Sometimes it's about being present, showing love, and trusting that He's moving even when I can't see it.

The people I met here became family. The missionaries I served with were the best hosts and the most genuine examples of what it means to live out faith daily. Their hearts for God and for people inspired me in so many ways. They poured into me, encouraged me, and showed me that ministry is about faithfulness – not perfection.

And the kids... they completely captured my heart. They became like my little brother and sister— full of joy, laughter, and so much life. I'll never forget their smiles, their hugs, and their endless energy. Both of them reminded me of God's love in the purest form. Leaving them behind is one of the hardest things I've ever done because they've become such a big part of me.

Moldova will always hold a special place in my heart. It's where I learned to slow down, to listen to God's whisper, and to find peace in His presence. It's where I realized that sometimes, the most important thing we can do is simply be faithful – to show up, love deeply, and let God do the rest.

I came here hoping to make an impact, but I'm leaving knowing that Moldova and the people here made an even greater impact on me. I'm going home changed – with a heart that's fuller, faith that's deeper, and a renewed understanding of what it means to truly walk with God.

This isn't goodbye, it's a see you later!
